Bindu trained as an actress at the acclaimed Drama Centre London, graduating with a degree in Acting and then went on to study Film Writing & Directing at City University, Raindance and the London Film School.

On graduating she landed a part in Danny Boyle's The Beach, later working with Danny again in 28 Days Later.

In 2001 Bindu founded a theatre company (Make a Play Productions), writing, producing and later directing stage plays in London. Her directorial debut was with Troop, a new play by Maggie Kirwan, based on the Anti Iraq War marches that happened around the world.

Through MaPP, Bindu also wrote and directed two short films: Things I Notice, Things You See, co-produced by Radiotelevisione svizzera (RSI) starring Michael Fassbender, and Gesundheit!, which was nominated for the Prix Europa Film Festival in Berlin. She then founded Thursday Films LLP and went on to write and direct two more shorts: Three, once again co-produced by RSI, starring Claire Price and The Kiss starring Jake Maskall.

Her experience as an actress and then as a theatre/short films director, led her to write and direct her first feature film called Jump, produced by Hugofilm, Manmade Films and RSI, which went on to win five Awards at the British Independent Film Festival in London in 2012, including Best Director and Best Feature Film.

Finding Camille is her second feature film.
